ERRATA.

IN the letter signed "John McDonald," published in the last number of this journal the word "Stern" is printed, by mistake, for "Stem" wherever it occurs.

THE present week marks an eventful period in the history of foreign relations with China, and in the Chronicles of Shanghai. The Plenipotentiaries of England, France and Russia have left and that of the United States will follow tomorrow, all bound to the mouth of the Peiho to prosecute their demands on the Emperor of China,—an ulterior step which, it appears, they are constrained to take in consequence of an unsatisfactory reply having been received to the letters addressed to Peking.

What those demands are we do not pretend to know, nor should we publish them if we did, if it were likely to hamper or in any degree militate against the speedy settlement of the matters in hand.

The Chinese have, as usual, their version of the matter, they profess to know that the demands are,—liberty of access to the interior under a passport system,—of trading at all the ports of the Yangtze Kiang,—a concession of ground at Hankow, similar to that we have here,—a reduction of duties on imports and exports,—a Resident Minister at Peking, cum multis aliis, amounting altogether, they say, to twenty-nine articles. Our own opinion is that there has not been any specific demand made, further than that an officer of sufficient rank should be sent to Shanghai to adjust preliminaries to future arrangements. If we are right, the refusal to comply is evident in the intimation received through the Governor of the Province that Hwang tsung han has been appointed Imperial Commissioner with full powers to settle Barbarian affairs at Canton, and that the foreign Plenipotentiaries must return there to arrange matters with him.

We also hear from Chinese sources that Hwang has instructions to retake the city of Canton from the Barbarians and has extraordinary powers for levying troops &c., from the different provinces to enable him to do so; we think this is very probable, and should Canton, unwisely, be restored to the Imperial Government by its present occupants before the final adjustment of affairs at Peking, accounts will be sent to the Emperor that the Barbarians have been driven out and Hwang will receive additional honors.

As to the intended proceedings in the Pei ho we are not informed, but with some confidence in our own predictions, verified as they have been by the past, we venture to foretell difficulties which will require more than mere demonstration to overcome. The blockade of Tien tsing, to prevent the supplies now going in great abundance Peking, we suppose will be the first step, and a similar measure on the Yangtze Kiang and Grand Canal should follow, and would do more to bring about a speedy adjustment than months of negociation, and we doubt not it will be done. Of course we shall see fulminating Edicts from the Emperor stopping the foreign trade for ever.

Mr. H. N. Lay, who some time since succeeded Mr. Wade as Inspector of the Chinese Custom House at this port, has been appointed by Lord Elgin to accompany the Expedition to the North, as Assistant Interpreter.

This appointment has caused some surprise, and much regret is felt that his Lordship should have allowed himself to be misled by interested parties into committing an act, of what may be considered discourtesy to the Consulate interpreters at the five ports in China.

There is little inducement held out to them to remain in the service spending year after year in improving their knowledge of a language, the study of which, above all others, is the most wearing out to the mind, if when the opportunity occurs, of making that knowledge more prominently useful, they find themselves coldly passed over, and others appointed in their place, who have, years since, thrown up the poorly remunerated posts of Consulate interpreters, allured by the more lucrative employment offered them by the Chinese government.

Of Mr. Lay's acquirements as a Chinese scholar, we have no wish to speak d sparagingly, on the contrary, we believe him to be thoroughly acquainted with the language, but we object in the strongest manner to any one in the pay of the Chinese government, being the person selected to act as Assistant Interpreter, when a new treaty is to be arranged between Great Britain and China.

Highly as Mr. Lay's attainments as a Chinese student may be estimated, we are assured that in critical knowledge of the language he is equalled, if not excelled by Mr. T. T. Meadows, Senior Interpreter in China, and now Acting-Consul at Ningpo. In our opinion Mr. Meadows would have been the proper person to have taken as joint Interpreter with Mr. Wade, the more so, when we bear in mind, that it was only after Mr. Meadows had refused to accept the post of Chinese Secretary under Sir John Bowring, that Mr. Wade received the appointment. It may be said that he could not be spared from Ningpo, but this we may be allowed to doubt, as the business at that port, is comparatively trivial, whilst on an important mission such as the present, when the representatives of Western powers, after the lapse of many years are about to be brought into immediate communication with the government at Peking, his thorough knowledge of the Chinese character, and diplomacy, would have made his services of the utmost value.

Lord Elgin however has thought otherwise, and not only is Mr. Meadows passed over, but his brother Mr. J. A. T. Meadows and Mr. Crofton Morrison, Interpreters, at this port and Amoy, and both able Chinese scholars, are also quietly put aside, and an employé of the Chinese government taken in their place.

In official communications with Eastern nations, it is of the last importance to insist on the most exact observance of the etiquette usual amongst themselves, and the omission of any point, however, unimportant it may appear, may be made the means of lowering us in the eyes of their government. With the Chinese who are famed for their ceremonial observances this is peculiarly the case, and in our "Notes on Embassies," we have mentioned, how anxious the mandarins have always been to represent the Ambassadors who have been at Peking as deputies sent to render homage to the Emperor, rather than the representatives of independant powers come to demand satisfaction for wrongs done to their subjects. Lately at Soochow when the deputation went up from this to present the letters from the Plenipotentiaries to the Emperor, we had occasion to notice the fact of the cards sent by the Toutai to the Members, having been returned, and pointed out that according to Chinese etiquette, this was an acknowledgement of their being of inferior rank. We are certain that the cards were given to Mr. Lay, who took upon himself to return them, without consulting the official interpreters, who accompanied the deputation.

Whether this occurred through ignorance, which we doubt, or whether from Mr. Lay being in the service of the Chinese government he may have thought it a good opportunity to ingratiate himself with his employers, we are not in a position to say, but it is to avoid a repetition of these mistakes, that we should have wished Mr. Meadows to have been taken instead of him. It will to some extent lessen the importance of the mission in the estimation of the Chinese government, when one of their own servants is found attached to it, and taking a leading part.

THE INSURGENTS.

ON the 18th ult.—the 4th day of the 2d moon,—Hü Kwan-yuen, one of His Majesty's generals, attacked the Insurgents in their strong-holds, called the Mah-ling Pass, near Nanking. He had not, it would seem, counted well the cost. He fell; and with him about two thousand of the Imperialists were lost, either killed or wounded. Having put their assailants to flight, the long-haired men advanced and re-occupied the city of Kân-shun, fifteen or twenty miles south of Nanking; and it was expected that the cities of Lishwui and Kin-tan would soon again be in their possession.

The report of their having returned to Chinkiang and Kwachau is not confirmed.

WE were misinformed last Saturday respecting the apprehension of the murderers of the Captain and mate of the Gallant, we regret to say they are still at large.

U. S. S. San Jacinto after transhipping stores, ammunition, &c., into the Minnesota at Woosung, proceeded on the 7th inst. on her passage to Hongkong, homeward bound. Commodore Tatnell went in her and will return northwards, immediately, in the Powhatan or Germantown.

H. I. M. Russian steamer, America, Capt. Chihachoff, having on board H. E. The Count Poutiatine and suite left the Harbour yesterday morning and proceeded to sea; her destination is the Gulf of Pecheli.

THE Furious, with Lord Elgin and suite left this morning early, bound to the Pei ho. She has the Gun-boat Slaney in tow.

The Nimrod arrived this morning, from Foochow, 6th. She will proceed northwards on Monday or Tuesday next.

The Fury will go to Ningpo to relieve the Surprise, that vessel being more useful for operations in shallow water.

THE movements of the American Legation we understand to be these.—H. E. William B. Reed, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, with his suite, consisting of Mr. S. Wells Williams, Secretary of Legation and Chinese Interpreter; Rev. W. A. P. Martin, Assistant Interpreter; A. McKinley and William Reed, Private Secretaries; and Frederick B. Jenkins, attaché; will proceed at once, sailing to-day or to-morrow in the Steam Frigate Mississippi, Captain Nicholson, from Woosung to the Gulf of Pechele and the mouth of the Peiho, accompanied by the chartered str. Antelope. The Minnesota will follow in a few days, so soon as some repairs are completed. The Naval Commander-in-Chief with the steam frigate Powhatan, and sloop-of-war Germantown, will, as soon as possible, probably in less than a fortnight, join Mr. Reed in the North.

THE P. & O. S. N. Company's steamer Lady Mary Wood, Capt. Browne, arrived at Woosung on the 5th and came up immediately bringing the London mail of 9th February, which was delivered in the forenoon.

The dates are, London 9th Feby. vid Marseilles,—Bombay 1st,—Galle 10th,—Singapore 18th,—Hongkong 31st ulto.

The mail arrived in Hongkong on the 28th per Bombay, Capt. Potts.

PASSENGERS.—From Galle.—Mrs. Potts, 2 children, and 8 gun Lascars; from Southampton,—Messrs. Remão, and A. Mesnie, Mr. and Mrs. McMurdo; from Marseilles,—Don Obonez, Messrs. J. B. Ross, Comstock, and Groschlande; from Penang,—Mrs. Jones, and child; from Singapore,—Mr. and Miss Voegler, Messrs. T. Tribbuy, G. Petel; from Cadiz,—Mr. and Mrs. Olona, Messrs. Yriarte, F. Reyes, and M. Reyes.

There is not much news contained in the journals of the fortnight. The first great event worthy of record is that the Leviathan, or Great Eastern, was at last successfully launched on the 31st of January, and towed to Deptford to fit out.

Parliament reassembled on the 4th Feby. A vote of thanks was passed in both houses to the Governor-general and Governors of India, Sir John Lawrence, Sir Colin Campbell, and several other distinguished persons, as well as to other Officers to Her Majesty's Army, Navy and Marines, and of the E. I. Company's service for the energy, skill and intrepedity that marked their conduct in India during the mutinies.—A Bill authorizing the E. I. Company to raise ten millions Sterling has been introduced into Parliament.—The Alien question, as it involves the right of asylum, was absorbing great attention and had given rise to much angry discussion, and ill feeling between England and France. The India Bill also maintained its interest; the Court of Proprietors have adopted the Petition of the Court of Directors to Parliament against the Government measure. The House of Commons has voted a pension of £1,000 per annum to Lady Havelock and a similar pension to her Son.

The money market had further improved, there was a redundancy of capital. The Bank's minimum rate of discount was reduced to 3½ per cent and Consols had risen to 95¾ to 96 for money.

The rate of the Bank of France was 4½ per cent and at Hamburg the best bills were discountable at 1¾ per cent.

The East India Company's rate of Exchange continued the same, viz., on Bengal and Madras 2*s.* 2*d.* and on Bombay 2*s.* 2½*d.*

WE have, in our Journal, a standing notice to correspondents* that all communications must be accompanied by the name of the author, which will be kept private, if desired.

We make this condition in order to protect ourselves from imposition by anonymous writers, and, in doing so, only ask the same confidence to be placed in us, that unknown correspondents claim at our hands.

In our No. 391, 23d Jany. last we inserted a translation of an Imperial Decree from the Peking Gazette, wherein the Minister of State memorializes the Emperor to confirm the appointment of a newly selected scholar to instruct the pupils in the Russian College. A note by the translator was appended which called forth an anonymous reply. We acknowledged its receipt in our No. 396 and requested the writer to favor us with his name. He has not done so. As the subject is one of interest we have made enquiry into it, the result of which refutes the statement contained in the note, and corroborates that of the letter referred to, and having received, indirectly, an intimation of the quarter from whence the latter emanates we make the following extracts from it:—

"The Chinese Government maintains at Peking a college under the name of "Russian School" so called from the Russian language being taught in it. It is not composed of the children, born from morganatic marriages of the lay members of the Russian mission with Chinese women, but of grown up sons of officials of Manchoo extraction, that are instructed in the Russian language. After finishing their studies they become interpreters of the Russian language at the Tribunal of foreign affairs (Li fan yuan 理藩院.

Bisides this there exists another school at the Russian mission in Peking, where, among other studies, the Russian language is taught. This school has no support from the Chinese Government and is kept for the instruction of children descended from Russians made captive in 1685, in the town of Albazin on the river Amoor."

The writer of the above, who signs himself "an ex-Lay member of the Russian mission at Peking" proceeds to say,—

"Having resided at Peking ten years I can affirm that no morganatic or any other marriages are formed between Chinese women and the young Russian lay men who are sent from time to time to Peking to acquire a knowledge of the Chinese and Manchoo languages. This does not happen, either "soon after their arrival at Peking," nor during the whole time of their reside.ce there. The Russians, as Christians cannot contract time marriages, and Chinese laws forbid females to quit their country, therefore no marriage can take place between them neither generally nor occasionally."

We have given the above extracts from the letter to explain the translation of the Edict and Note, in order to remove any false impression they may have made; but we consider the writer has failed in courtesy to us, in not communicating his name since it has been made known to him that we only waited for it before inserting his letter entire.

To the Editor of the
NORTH-CHINA HERALD:

SIR,—The old saying, "It takes two to make a bargain," seems very opposite to the case,—at present occupying a large place in the consideration of yourself and of your readers—that of negotiating for new Treaties.

The spectacle, we now witness, is remarkable. Four great nations, the greatest on earth, have here their representatives, clothed with full powers, all equally and alike wishing to treat with the sovereign authorities of this empire. But will the Chinese enter into any negotiations with these plenipotentiaries, except on compulsion? If they will not, will it be right to employ compulsory measures? And if right, then what sort of force, and how much, will they bring to bear upon these unwilling rulers or their people, or upon both people and rulers?

Whatever claims, whatever of right or reason, these plenipotentiaries may have, on their side, it is obvious enough to all that the Emperor of China and his ministers are unwilling to enter on any negotiations, in short are resolved not to touch the treaties they have ratified, first with Russia, and then, and more recently, with England, the United States, and with France. The action of the Imperial Court, for months and for years past, has proclaimed, more clearly than any written documents could declare, a fixed resolve not to negotiate, but, on the contrary, to keep all comers far off at a distance. Witness the recent transactions, at Canton, here, and at Peking, and then say, if the Chinese are not strongly averse to treat. Never, never will they treat except on compulsion. For one I can hardly believe our plenipotentiaries really expected here to meet ministers from Peking, ready to treat with them. Such assuredly is not the disposition of the Son of Heaven or of those who are resolved to uphold the old exclusive policy.

Such being their disposition, is it right to employ compulsory measures to make them willing? On this question a diversity of opinion would seem to exist; and there is diversity of action as well. The minister of the English crown, not long ago was understood to declare that his country was not at war with, and was not going to make war against, the Chinese. Action, however, has given a different aspect to the case; and, with reference to the question of right, two of the four plenipotentiaries have declared their verdict. War is begun. England and France, as allied powers, are at war with the Chinese.

Do the other plenipotentiaries concur in this action and sympathize in these coercive measures? Or do they and will they oppose and protest against them? The latter, they certainly will not do. Will they, then, take a neutral stand? Probably not; one may, but the other can hardly do so. A majority of these four representatives of supreme authority, therefore, give, or will give, the verdict that, it is right to use coercive means in this case. Thus practically, for the present, the question is settled.

Now then comes the strife. What sort of force, and how much, will these foreign representatives bring to the conflict?

This question, Mr. Editor, I will leave for you, or for them, to answer. They hope, no doubt—and who does not?—that the struggle may be a short one. Probably enough it may be so; but again, this is not at all a sure and certain consequence. The contingencies are many, the struggle may be long and disastrous, and the finale very remote. However, the die is cast; and it is the die of war. The British Lion is in the van. His Excellency, who has been put forward in this emergency, has exhibited remarkable moderation, and this, by the Chinese, may have been misunderstood. But such a man is not one who will flinch, especially when flanked and supported as he now is. All four,—England, France, Russia, and the United States, have made their demands, not rashly, but resolutely; and these demands will not be withdrawn.

Before your next issue goes forth to the world, Mr. Editor, the advanced flotilla, or some portion of it, will be moving up, under full press of canvas and of steam, to the Gulf that opens the way to the northern capital, towards which point it is known the Four Plenipotentiaries have laid their course. Success to their enterprise!

PAX.

Shanghai, 8th April, 1858.

SHANGHAI WITHIN THE WALLS.

NATIVE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

One of the most deplorable results of the recent occupation of the City by the plundering "Red-Heads," has been the impoverishment of several Benevolent Institutions which formerly flourished here.

As things were ten years ago, a visitor might have seen a "Save-Life Office," (corresponding to our Humane Society, for the rescue of drowning persons); a Foundling Hospital; an Office for the procurement of Coffins, (to assist the poor in meeting funeral expenses); a Strangers' Home; several Free Schools; and finally, an Institution called the "Hall of Universal Benevolence," which undertook to attend to all kinds of humane operations—such as burying the dead, clothing the destitute and aged, giving pensions to the needy, building bridges, extinguishing fires, lighting streets, prescribing for the sick, publishing sacred books, dispensing medicines, &c., &c. All the abuse showered by the Chinese against those "Good Devils" the meritoriousness of which avails to procure them happiness in their next stage of existence, i. e. after their next transmigration.

The arrangements of this last-named Institution, as they might have been seen a few years since, were admirable; especially would a visitor have been struck with the order that prevailed during the days when the sick were prescribed for. The large Hall of the establishment was filled with square tables, at each of which sat four persons; the physician, with the patient on his right, and on his left a writer who made notes of each case in a record-book,—opposite the physician was another clerk who wrote out the prescription and gave it to the patient.

Six times during each of the hot months did these prescribing days recur,—"Three-eight;" as the Chinese concisely express it; that is, on the 3rd and 8th; 13th and 18th; 23rd and 28th day of each moon—a method of keeping count which is very common, and the perfection of convenience.

The apparatus for extinguishing fires is of the simplest kind: buckets, ladders, and small force-pump fire-engines of native construction.

The funds of the Institution are chiefly derived from voluntary contributions—the Mandarins for the time being and certain of the commercial Guilds are generally large subscribers. But another source of revenue—rents of houses—has been almost entirely cut off by the destruction of property consequent on the recent occupation and plunder of the City. Indeed the Institution is so much impoverished that it hardly attempts to do anything now: to bury the dead out of sight is about all that it can accomplish.

In like manner the Strangers Home has been almost obliterated; its buildings burned, and its affairs disorganized: it is difficult to fix on the site which was recently occupied by its premises.

The "Save-Life Office" has fared better, and so has the building in which two of the best-conducted Free-schools are held. The Foundling Hospital also still flourishes, and is an establishment especially to be commended, as adapted to prevent a great amount of infanticide—the strangling of female infants being a besetting sin among the very poor.

To these ought to be added the "Hall of Continence"—an establishment which allows pensions to widows; not the aged, but the younger ones, who are thus guarded against the temptation of marrying a second time for the sake of a support.

Temporary schemes of benevolence are frequently entered upon, and are discontinued where the occasion which made them necessary has passed away. In cases of well-authenticated failure of crops, the District Magistrate will order allowances to be made to the sufferers, at the rate of about thirty cash each to adults and fifteen to children. At the present moment there are large numbers of Nankin refugees scattered over this District who are provided for in this manner; so that considerable deductions must be made from the commonly-received statement that "the Chinese have nothing like a Poor-law system."

During the famine which followed the devastating flood of 1849, as many as three thousand children were collected together and cared for during the winter months; when the early bean crop was ready to be gathered in the third moon, as many as possible returned to their parents; and those that remained unclaimed were taken into the Foundling Hospital, which was enlarged on the occasion.

There is one point of great interest connected with all these Institutions. Some Roman Catholics claim that they had their rise in the days of the Emperor Yung Ching, immediately after the expulsion of the Jesuit Missionaries, and the confiscation of their property; and they maintain that the Emperor, out of shame at having appressed so many religious houses, was led to set up these various establishments as substitutes.

On this matter none would be more glad to receive information than

YOUR CITY CORRESPONDENT.

A PUBLIC MEETING of the British residents at Foochow was held on 1st March, to take into consideration the establishment of a Consular Chaplaincy at that rising Port.

The meeting was convened by H. M. Officiating Consul, at the special invitation of the Bishop of Victoria, and was held at the office of the British Consulate. The various mercantile firms were represented in the attendance on the occasion; and besides the Bishop and the Consul, there were present Messrs. Kinmont, Dow, Chapman, Westall, Pyke, Grove, Larkin, Dring, Dick, Lloyd, Crawford, J. Smith, Green, Gregory, Varco, and Forster.

On the motion of the Bishop of Victoria, seconded by F. H. Grove, Esq., H. M. Officiating Consul, Mr. Hale, took the Chair. In his opening remarks he proceeded to state, that the opportune presence and valuable aid of the Bishop rendered it unnecessary for him to occupy at any length the time of the meeting; and he had only to call upon his Lordship at once to address them on the subject of the meeting.

The Bishop then delivered an address to the meeting in the course of which he entered into detailed particulars of the general desirableness of their having a pastor of the Church of England resident among them, and the measures by which this desirable object might be speedily accomplished.

In the Port of Foochow there was a large and growing foreign commerce, the numbers of the European residents had of late rapidly increased, and the presence of an English Clergyman of suitable qualifications would (in his opinion) be a great advantage to the foreign community generally, and more particularly to the many young men who arrived in China at an early age, and were at a critical period of life removed from the moral influence of their native country and parental home. The Bishop stated his views that to ensure the full benefits of a Consular Chaplaincy, the individual selected to fill that post should not be merely a Clergyman performing the routine of his Sunday duties among them, but also be one who would during the week fulfil the duties of pastoral usefulness by moving amongst them, as a friend and companion, promoting not only their moral and religious welfare, but also seeking to direct the intellectual tastes and mental culture of the younger members of his flock.

They needed among them a Clergyman, a graduate of one of the universities, who bringing to his work an independent mind and strength of character, might lead them in the right way, and exemplify among them the character of a well educated christian gentleman, as well as that of a zealous pastor. On the proper selection of the right man for the place, it chiefly depended whether his own wishes and expectations and those of the meeting would be realized. They all knew—that the provisions of the Act 6, Geo. 4, chap. 87, vested the nomination and subsequent power of removal of a Consular Chaplain, with the Secretary of state for foreign affairs. From his own experience the Bishop stated his belief that the Heads of the Foreign Office exercised their patronage and power in a most liberal generous, and considerate manner; and in their selection of Chaplains desired only to forward the wishes and interests of the local communities abroad. He had full confidence in the manner in which the present foreign Secretary of state would exercise his power of nomination; and felt assured that Lord Clarendon would be sure to select a Chaplain for the post, would endeavour only to promote the welfare of the community, by sending them a Clergyman both morally and intellectually well qualified for the post.

The first resolution was moved by F. H. Grove, Esq., and seconded by James Dow, Esq., and carried unanimously.

"That this meeting judging it desirable to establish a Consular Chaplaincy at Foochow, request H. M. Officiating Consul to make a formal representation to that effect of the wishes of the local British community to H. M. Principal Secretary of state for foreign affairs, through H. M. Chief Superintendent of Trade, with the view of securing the benefits of the provisions of the Act 6, Geo. 4, chap. 87."

The second resolution was moved by T. Pyke, Esq., seconded by Captain Crawford and carried unanimously.

"That a subscription list be circulated among the foreign community at Foochow, and that Messrs. Grove and Dow be requested to act as Trustees of a Chaplaincy Fund."

The third resolution was moved by R. R. Westall, Esq., and seconded by Thos. H. Chapman, Esq.

"That on the subscriptions reaching the amount of $1,200, and that sum being paid or guaranteed, to H. M. Officiating Consul, the local Trustees in concurrence with H. M. Officiating Consul—be requested to address such a memorial to the Foreign office, as may secure the grant of an equal sum from the British Government, and the early adoption of measures for the nomination and sending out of a Chaplain to Foochow at an aggregate salary of $2,400 or £600 Stg. per annum.

To this resolution an amendment was moved by W. B. Varco, Esq., and seconded by Captain Crawford proposing that the sum of £800 a year should be substituted instead of £600 in the resolution as the Chaplain's salary.

After some conversation, in which Messrs. Hale, Grove, Dow, and the Bishop joined, and during which the opinion seemed generally to prevail, that it was preferable to consider the offer of £600 a year as only a minimum capable of being increased by the liberality of the foreign residents at any time, the amendment was negatived and the original resolution was unanimously adopted."

The fourth resolution respecting the building of a Church, for which about four thousand dollars were subscribed some months ago, was moved by Thos. L. Larken, Esq., and seconded by Captain Dring and carried unanimously.

"That the sum already promised for the Building of a Church be immediately collected; and that the aid of the foreign office be requested in doubling the amount of local subscriptions and granting a portion of the Consular ground as a site; and further that Messrs. Grove and Dow be requested to act as Trustees for the Church building fund, and to take the necessary means in concurrence with H. M. Officiating Consul for forwarding the matter.

Mr. Varco then made some remarks to the meeting respecting the important assistance of the Bishop in forwarding the object for which they were assembled; and especially intimated his view of the desirableness of formally adopting the following resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Dow and carried unanimously."

Proposed "That the Lord Bishop of Victoria be requested to address a communication to Lord Clarendon explanatory of the local circumstances and requirements of this community with respect to the qualifications of a Chaplain to be appointed to this Port."

The Chairman, in reply to a vote of thanks for presiding, alluded in terms of satisfaction to the unanimity which had prevailed, after which the meeting was dissolved.

(Signed) FRED. HOWE HALE.

The following notice of the Pei-ho, taken from the Chinese Repository will be interesting at the present moment:—

PEKING—the northern capital, so called in contradistinction to Nanking, or southern capital—is situated near the western extremity of an immense plain, and distant to the northwest, say one hundred and fifty miles from the anchorage for ships at the mouth of the Pei-ho. Barrow says the distance is 170 miles from the entrance of the river to the city of Tungchau: but subsequently in a right line, on the chart accompanying Staunton's Account of Macartney's embassy, the distance is only 108 common English miles. From Tungchau to Peking the distance is twelve miles.

On the 9th of August, 1840, the Wellesley anchored off the mouth of this river, in lat. 38° 53′ 3″ N., and long. 118° E., with six fathoms at low tide.

H. B. M. ship Alceste, captain Murray Maxwell, bearing the right honorable Lord Amherst, embassador extraordinary, minister plenipotentiary, &c., anchored off the mouth of this river on the 28th of July, 1816, in five fathoms, about lat. 38° 58′ N., and long. 117° 57′ E.

H. B. M. ship Lion, captain Sir Erasmus Gower, having on board the Earl of Macartney, embassador extraordinary, minister plenipotentiary, &c., anchored near the same place on the 25th of July, 1793.

From the writings of those who were connected with these three missions, and from native maps, we shall bring together such information as seems most likely to interest our readers, at a moment when another visit to the north may be expected. Staunton, Barrow, Ellis, Davis, and Abel are the authors from whom most of our information is derived.

"The rise and fall of the tides, at the Lion's anchorage, were about eight or nine feet. They ebbed and flowed irregularly, and from every point of the compass; but the strength of the flood tide was from the southeast, and of the ebb from the northwest. On the sixth of August (being the day of the new moon), the flood tide made at nine hours and forty minutes in the morning; it rose ten feet, and was high water at one o'clock; and remained without turning till four in the afternoon. The wind was then east, and moderate. There was no perceptible difference in the observation of the tide on the following day." Staunton, vol. II., p. 79.

"The line of coast, from that point where the Great Wall terminates in the sea, lat. 40° 4′ N., long. 120° 2′ E., runs southwest till to the south of the river, where it trends first southward and then eastward. In clear weather the forts and a pagoda, near the river's mouth, are visible from the anchorage, 12 or 14 miles due east. At the mouth of the river is a bar, stretching northwest, over which, at low water, the depth is not more than three or four feet, and which in many places is nearly or quite dry. The Madagascar, on the 11th of August, 1840, had twelve feet at spring tides. Lieutenant Campbell, in 1793, found "that a course of west by north, according to compass, led up the best channel, and that with the fort which stands on the southwest side of the entrance into the river, which at its mouth was about one-third of a mile in width, and three fathoms in depth at low water." Upon the bar and within it, Staunton says the water is thick and sandy, although outside it is remarkably green and clear. He found the bar divided into a number of sandy banks, lying in various directions, but so high and so close to each other as to prevent the passage, even of small vessels, except at high water. Immediately within the bar, the water deepened to three or four fathoms. The river was there about five hundred yards in width. Mr. Gutzlaff, who visited Tientsin in a Chinese vessel, in Sep., 1831, says "the river has no regular tides, but constantly flows into the sea with more or less rapidity." Chi. Rep., vol. I., p. 136.

On its southern bank, or the left of the entrance, is the small village of Tungkû. Its situation is low and swampy, and the ground in its vicinity is covered, in summer, with the Arundo phragmites, a long and not altogether useless reed.

From this village the vessels first move almost due north for three or four miles, then turning westward and southward, 'making a complete elbow,' they move against the current, till nearly due west from Tungkû they reach Sikû (Seekoo); thence turning again westward and northward, and making another elbow, they arrive at Tâkû; and thus on, in a zigzag course, they wind their way to Tientsin, a distance of forty miles in a right line, but more than twice that following the river's channel.

* * * * * * *

Referring to this part of the river, Staunton says its banks are higher than the adjacent plains; accordingly, large quantities of earth were placed along its sides, in order immediately to fill up any breach which from time to time might be made in them by inundations. In his second day's traveling, a considerable inclosure was, for the first time, perceived, resembling a gentleman's park. This was the residence of the chief of a district. His dwelling was distinguished by treble gates, and by two poles erected near them, each forty feet high, destined to bear ensigns of dignity by day, and lanterns by night. Within his inclosures were several buildings, a variety of trees, and some sheep and horses. Hitherto he had seen few cattle of any kind. To his view the fields exhibited "a high state of cultivation," generally covered with barbatoes millet, growing ten or twelve feet high, and the lowest calculation of its increase was an hundred fold. The houses had the appearance of being built of mud, as at the mouth of the river; but, on a closer inspection, the walls were found to be made of bricks ill-burnt, or dried in the sun. On one side of the river was a large grove of high and wide spreading pines; near and amongst which were monuments of stone, erected to the memory of persons buried underneath. On the opposite bank were the stacks of salt, estimated at six hundred millions of pounds in weight, and of which every body has heard. This salt was in bags. Similar masses were seen by Abel, which in most instances, however, were not bags, but were covered with matting. These stacks were in sight at Tientsin, the general emporium of the northern provinces, 'built,' says Staunton, 'at the confluence of two rivers, from which it rises in a gentle slope.' One of these two flows down from near Peking, the other comes from a more southern region. A third flows in from the south, forming a communication between Tientsin and the Grand Canal.

The practicability of marching from the coast to Tientsin, we are unable to determine from any information in our possession. Infantry no doubt could easily move across the plain, but artillery probably could not—for we suppose (from what we know of other parts of the country) that ditches and small canals run in almost every direction, and that the only roads are narrow foot-paths. Staunton says, the governor of the province, who awaited the arrival of the embassador at Tâkû, came to Tientsin from thence, over land, by a shorter route than was described by the windings of the river. Ellis mentions, in his Journal, while at Sikû, 'the carts on two wheels,' as justifying the complaints that have been made of them. He says also, that he 'was surprised with the size of the Chinese horses, having been led to expect that their height did not exceed that of small ponies; on the contrary, they were not inferior in that respect to the generality of Arab horses; they are, however, coarse and ill-shaped, and promise neither strength nor action.'

Above Tientsin the river gradually contracts its dimensions, and the stream becomes more powerful. The tide, of which the flood had aided the progress of the yachts conveying Macartney's embassy, ceased about thirty miles beyond the city. The embassy was six days in passing from Tientsin to Tungchau; and it was not until the fourth day that "some high blue mountains were seen rising from the northwest." On this small branch of the river, within a distance of ninety miles, Barrow estimated that there were floating not less than 100,000 souls. As the embassy advanced, the country began to assume a less uniform appearance, being now broken into hill and dale. Few trees appeared, except large willows on the banks, and knots of elms or firs before the houses of distinguished men, and the temples—both of which were generally found at the head of each village. More grain was cultivated here than on the plains near the mouth of the river. Different sorts of kidney-beans, and some patches of buckwheat, also, were observed, and a species of nettle, the Urtica nivea, of which cloth is manufactured. Considerable tracts of pasture or meadow land intervened between the villages, on which were seen a few small cattle, and some of the broad-tailed sheep.

Here may be noted—what all the travelers seem to have omitted, that the Pei-ho enters the sea, or gulf, through two channels. The embassies ascended the southern one. The southern is marked on native maps as being wider than the other, and runs nearly parallel to it, until some miles above Tientsin, where the two unite. On one of our Chinese maps this northern channel is forked, one branch coming from the Pei-ho, say thirty miles below Tungchau, and the other twenty miles lower down. This northern channel (probably a marshy expanse) is impracticable for boats of any considerable size.

The city of Tungchau stands on the southern side of the river, by the water of which one of its sides is washed, the others are defended by a broad wet ditch. The principal streets are straight, paved with broad flag-stones, having a raised footpath on each side. The buildings are such as are common in other cities of similar size. The suburbs are extensive; and the adjacent country for several miles around, is level and fertile. Sir. Davis seems to represent the city as being a mile and a half distant from the river, and describes it as being very inferior to Tientsin.

The avenue, or great road leading to the capital, lies across an open country, perfectly level, sandy, and ill-cultivated. About fifteen to twenty feet in the middle part of the road, is paved with granite slabs from six to sixteen feet in length, and about four feet broad. Each one of these enormous flag-stones must have been brought at least sixty miles: "the nearest quarry," says Barrow, "where quarries of granite are found, being those that divide China Proper from Manchu Tartary, near the Great Wall." On each side of this granite pavement is a road unpaved, wide enough for carriages to pass upon it. In many places the road is bordered with trees, particularly willows of a very uncommon growth. A temple, on the right side of the road, and a bridge of white marble, having the balustrade ornamented with figures, meant to represent lions or other animals, cut out of the same material, were the only objects that attracted any notice, until the walls and lofty gates of the capital appeared in view. Barrow's account of Macartney's advance to the capital is amusing, differing wholly from that given by Mr. Davis of Amherst and his suite. With the first embassy everything was "grand and magnificent," wearing a pleasing aspect; with the other all was 'mean and villainous,' disgusting and detestable in the extreme.

The city of Tientsin 天津, is in lat. 39° 10′ N., about 90 miles S.E. from the capital, which is in lat. 39° 55′ N., long. 116° 55′ E. from Greenwich, and nearly due west, distant about 30 miles from the mouth of the Pei-ho, which, rising beyond the Great Wall, flows within 12 miles of Peking, and thence to Tientsin and the sea. A little below the river's mouth there is a bar of sand, stretching N.N.E. and S.S.W., over which, at low water, the depth is not more than three or four feet.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—On the 28th ultimo, about 2 miles from the Sailor's Home, Hong-kaw, a man named Ching-ama, a carpenter, on his way from Woosung to Shanghai was met by 5 or 6 Malays and robbed of six dollars and 2,000 cash. On his refusing to give up the cash one of them cut his ear off clean with his knife. The poor man had to run to save his life. The whole party had kulves.

DARING BURGLARY.—Stolen some time during the night of the 27th ultimo from the godown of Messrs. Ullett & Co., 20 bales of packing paper. Robbery effected through Messrs. Moncrieff, Grove & Co.'s garden by breaking a hole through the godown wall. Nine of the bales were found in the garden. Police Constable No. 7, when on duty near the market of E. M. Smith, at half-past 5 A.M., saw 3 Chinese pass up North gate street with 4 bales. On the Police Constable going up to see what they had, they put down the bales and ran away, the Police Constable had the 2 bales removed to the Station, they are marked W G in the centre of a diamond, and are numbered 25 and 40, the Nos. of the missing bales are 18, 19, 20, 24, 30, 46, 54.

The Police Constable believes the burglars to be all Canton men.

A WIFE'S REPORT.—A clergyman of our acquaintance being recently in company where several ladies were present, his wife among the number, and the recent crimes of Mrs. Cunningham becoming the subject of conversation, remarked with a sort of roguish leer, that when a woman fell she was far worse in her conduct than one of the other sex. "My dear husband," replied his wife, "you will recollect that the height from which she falls is infinitely greater."—Cambridge Chronicle.

The late Thomas Moore had written in one of his productions, "the mellow dreams of Horace," but the compositor, or the reader, supposing he could not have seen the last amphitheatrical bill, printed it "the melodrames of Horses."

TIN.—In 1856 the quantity of tin imported amounted to 3,464 tons 2 cwts., and 749 tons of tin ore and regulus; and there were exported 1,874 tons 6 cwts. of British tin, and 200 tons 5 cwts. of foreign tin, with 4 tons of foreign tin ore. —Companion to the Almanack, 1858.

SPIRITS.—In the year ending December 31, 1856, the total quantity of spirits distilled in the United Kingdom was 28,197,065 gallons; of which 7,053,158 gallons were distilled in England, 12,001,008 in Scotland, and 8,542,809 in Ireland. The quantity on which duty was paid for home consumption was 23,300,556 gallons; of which 16,510,488 were taken in Great Britain, and 6,781,068 in Ireland, the total amount of duty paid being 8,608,624*l.* The quantity exported to foreign parts in the same period was 4,334,253 gallons; of which 1,700,963 were from England, 2,201,048 from Scotland, and 342,242 from Ireland.—Ibid.

EMIGRATION.—In 1856 the total number of Emigrants from the United Kingdom was only 176,554, of whom 71,724 were from Ireland. The chief decrease is the emigration from Ireland, which is upwards of 7,000 less, but the gross number is only 253 less than that of 1855. Of the total number in 1856 there were 111,837 to the United States, 16,378 to our North American Colonies, 44,584 to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, and 3,755 to all other places. The rate of mortality among the emigrants had been very small; to North America, on 72,443 passengers, the amount was only 0·10 per cent. Of the total number to the Australian Colonies 20,385 were assisted by the Emigration Commissioners, and the rate of mortality in the transit had been small.—Ibid.

R. T. PRITCHETT, RIFLE, GUN, AND SWORD MANUFACTURER to Her Majesty's War Department and the Hon. East India Company, begs to call the attention of Officers and Gentlemen abroad to the sound quality and efficiency of the Arms he produces, both for Military purposes and the Sports of the Field. Every GUN sold by R. T. PRITCHETT is manufactured on the premises, and every RIFLE is bored, rifled, and shot under his personal superintendence. For both large or small bore the PRITCHETT BULLET, as adopted by H. M. Government, without cup or plug, is found most serviceable—very numerous testimonials having been received of its range and truth of flight. To the manufacture of SWORDS also, great attention is paid, the most efficient proof of strength and spring being applied, a guarantee given of the quality of the blade, which is uniformly tested by powerful machinery in the presence of the purchaser, before made up.
